Real Economy And One Way to Achieve It

STOP TAKING GOODS FROM STORES "ON APPROVAL" WHEN YOU HAVE NO INTENTION OF MAKING THE PURCHASE

HERE are a great many methods of achieving that kind of economy which will not produce business degression

One of these methods is by ABANDONING THE PRACTICE of returning goods bought at the stores. An immense amount in value and quality of goods is constantly in transit and out of use because women recklessly order goods to be sent home on approval which they do NOT INTEND to buy at all or which they have not given sufficient consideration before ordering them.

This entails great loss to the stores, a waste of labor and a wastage of material. One merchant calculates that he has all the time a hundred thousand dollars' worth of goods out on his wagons which are returned.

Not only is there this WASTE of labor and material, but there is the further destruction of the goods. Dishonest purchasers use them and then send them back. Of course, the honest and thoughtful customers PAY the cost of all this sort of thing. The merchant has to make profit, and if it costs him an enormous sum to accord this return privilege to reckless and inconsiderate women, it must be paid for by other customers.

If everybody would try to give more consideration to the purchase when it is being made, and then would make the purchase OUTRIGHT, it would SAVE hundreds of thousands of dollars which OUGHT to be saved DISCOURAGES SALE AND USE OF FIREWORKS. Defense Council Strongly Urges Public Patriotic Demonstrations.

Every community in Connecticut will ce ebrate July 4th this year as a day of consecration to national ideals and a day of dedication to national service, if the Connecticut state council of defense succeeds in plans which it has undertaken through its committee on publicity. The defense council has decided that independence day means more to the American this year than it usually does, and has voted to request officials in every town to consider this special significance and arrange for the observance of the day in such a manner that all the impressiveness of American tradition will be brought home to Connecticut citizens in this occasion.

It is not the purpose of the state defense council to interfere in any way with plans for the observance of Independence day which many communities already have developed. Its purpose is to induce communities in which no plans have been made for Fourth of already have developed. Its purpose is to induce communities in which no plans have been made for Fourth of July celebration to begin preparations at once for a proper observance of the day. Some form of elebration is expected in every community by Gov. Marcus H. Holcomb and his war council.

Marcus H. Holcomb and his war council.

The council of defense publicity committee is now engaged in preparing a list of persons in the various communities to whom it may appeal for assistance in putting through its Independence day celebration plans, Features which it will recommend for the programs include flag raisings, music, both vocal and instrumental, and speaking. The committee recommends that each town secure outside speakers as far as possible, and offers the cooperation of ith speakers' bureau in arranging for these patriotic addresses. It will ask the various communities to consider the advisability of special recognition on Independence day this year for those men between the ages of 21 and 21 who registered on June 5th under the selective service law, both at the church service on Sunday, July 1st, and at the patriotic gatherings on Wednesday, July 4th.

Recognizing the position in which America, finds herself on this Fourth of July, the defense council's committee is pointing out the special religious significance of the occasion. The various communities will be asked, in planning their programs for the day, to consider that the independence celebrated on July Fourth was fought for by past generations of Americans, and that the nation has now come to an hour when its citizens must fight to maintain that independence so dearly bought. Every community is to be urged to make the celebration of Independence day, 1917, a day of consecra-bought. Every community is to be urged to make the celebration of Independence day, 1917, a day of consecration to national ideals, a day of recognition of leadership from above, and a day of preparation for service.

The council of defense has taken the position that the sale and use of fireworks this year should be discouraged in all communities in the state. In place of the fireworks, which in the past have been costly in life, limb and money, public patriotic demonstrations are strongly urged. are strongly urged.

It is also probable that plans will be perfected within a day or two for a vigorous recruiting campaign for Connecticut National guard, and that recruiting on Independence day may form one of the principal features of this occasion. this occasion
